ACADEMIC AND PROFESSIONAL APPOINTMENTS

DIRECTOR

School of International Affairs
Penn State University (starting July 1, 2023)

ASSOCIATE DEAN FOR ACADEMIC AFFAIRS

College of International Studies (July 2015 - Sep 2019; July 2020 to July 2023)

Developed a College of International Studies Research Support Council to award internal College research funds to faculty and to support faculty grant efforts internal and external to OU.

Led the development of a new online MA in Global Affairs program; wrote program proposal for submission and approval by State Regents; developed curriculum; structured and led faculty development program. Initiated in fall 2015, the program reached enrollment of 125 students in 2022. Expanded access to a quality online degree while raising more than $1 million in tuition revenue during fiscal year 2022.

Study of Nationalism; African Studies Institute) and allocated funding, coordinated programming, sustained collaboration, expanded international research partnerships, and elevated external funding effort

Revised the curriculum for the MA in International Relations offered by OU Extended Campus through a contract with the U.S. Department of Defense. Implemented transition from an interdisciplinary MA with an emphasis in international relations to an MA in International Relations for this 400-student MA program.

Oversaw revision and submission of application for renewed funding of the College's Arabic Flagship Grant ($305,000), 2017-18

INTERIM DEAN (October 2019 – July 2020)
College of International Studies, The University of Oklahoma

Served as chief executive of college of 400 undergraduate majors and minors, 150 MA students, 27 faculty, 45 staff members, offices of International Student Services and Education Abroad and two Study Centers abroad (Italy and Mexico) and a budget of $10 million. Prior to the pandemic, the College served 1900 international students from 120 countries and sent 1600 students abroad annually.

Collaborated broadly to expand role of CIS as a hub for campus internationalization.

Reviewed and restructured College budget to achieve savings and to allocate resources more effectively. Revised and clarified policies for budgeting study abroad programs and setting student fees.

Initiated the College's first ever small donor campaign in late fall 2019, raising $58,675 to enhance access to study abroad for students with high financial need and to assist international students with significant need.

Engaged in crisis management efforts in response to global pandemic, including overseeing the closing of study centers abroad, bringing students studying abroad safely back to US, messaging regarding plans for summer 2020 and fall 2020 study abroad programs, and managing the transition to online teaching for spring and summer 2020.

Planned and implemented transition to remote working environment for college staff to ensure safety while sustaining continuity, communications, and morale.

Advocated for international students on the OU campus. Intensified advocacy in spring 2020 in response to dramatic challenges confronting international students due to global pandemic.

Organized college-wide strategic planning process spanning academics, research, and outreach centers, Education Abroad, study centers abroad and International Student Services.

PROFESSOR AND CHAIR (May 2012 to August 2019)
Department of International and Area Studies
Max and Heidi Berry Chair in International Studies

Conducted 14 successful faculty searches in multiple disciplines: anthropology; history; law and policy; linguistics and literature; political science; sociology; geography

Increased faculty diversity through creation and involvement of a new departmental Committee on Diversity, Equity and Inclusion in all searches

Organized and managed a year-long (2014-15) comprehensive revision of the curriculum for our 9 undergraduate majors, with broad faculty and student involvement

Initiated and managed a comprehensive revision of the curriculum for our MA program in International Studies (2016-18), again with broad faculty inclusion

Enhanced faculty development and mentoring, introducing a competitive tenure-track faculty course reduction award, an outstanding faculty award and additional funding for faculty research support

Initiated a strategic planning process to prepare for the septennial academic and external review of the Department of International and Area Studies scheduled for 2018-19

PUBLICATIONS AND WORK IN PROGRESS

Book Projects in Progress:

Who Speaks for Europe?

There is a fundamental disjuncture in Europe between the means of integration and the means of socialization. What are the consequences for the integration project? How have EU institutions addressed this challenge? Where have they failed? How might they be more successful?

The Great Perceptual Divide

Drawing on literature in social psychology, the book examines the deep political gulf in the US and a similar divide in the UK over British exit from the European Union. To what extent do perceptions converge as additional information – about the costs of British exit, for example – becomes available? If perceptions do not converge, why not? What are the consequences for democracy?

Journal Submissions in Progress:

“From National to European Socialization: The House of European History and Integration as an Organic Process”

Based on extensive study of the exhibits at the House of European History established in Brussels by the European Parliament, the article identifies a narrative of integration as an organic process in which borders are unnatural, porous and fluid; when borders defy these characteristics and there are political efforts to render national demarcations more fixed and rigid, destructive conflict ensues.

“The Rise of Regulatory Populism” (Accepted for presentation at the September 2020 Conference of the University Association on Contemporary European Studies, Belfast)

EU regulation is vulnerable to local media and political criticism focused on costs because regulations are designed to produce public goods, such as reduced electronic waste and protection of biodiversity rather than benefits highly visible to individuals. Can “regulatory populism” – characterized by measures like “roam like at home” (ending international roaming charges) and the “right to repair” (ensuring parts are available to repair heavy appliances) transcend local socialization effects?
